My First Chevy...by Sherwin Silver

I bought my first Classic Chevy in 1959. It was a 1955 Bel Air 2-door hardtop. It was a V8, 2-barrel, Powerglide with 2-tone blue paint. Actually, it was not a Classic Chevy. It was a used car. It was my second car, the first one being a 1950 Ford with 3 on the tree. I was young enough to find the most fun I could have with that Chevy was going into passing gear. Apparently, you can do that just so many times before the Powerglide gives up.

At the time, I was not one to find an AAMCO and have the Powerglide rebuilt. One of my best friends had a cousin who owned a wrecking yard with an attached auto repair shop. I took the Chevy there to North Long Beach and had the repairs done. The repairs included a big block out of a 1958 Impala and a 3-speed manual transmission with a floor shift. In hindsight, I was impressed that the mechanics knew to install a six-cylinder radiator for engine clearance. So many of those early conversions resulted in cutting the cross member and reattaching the regular V8 radiator. They did, however, adjust the firewall just a little with a sledge hammer. That was when my friend's cousin, owner of the junkyard and repair shop, told me that General Motors spent millions to develop a great car and people like me have to go and change it. That was his way of complaining about the extra work involved in getting the 348 to fit. He had priced the job on the fact that the 1958 had a big block or a small block and everything should fit the same way in a '55.

During those days, I thought of myself as a little bit of an artist and decided to paint a picture on the dashboard. I had painted a dragon caricature on the dash of the Ford so I was experienced. I found a produce box that had a pretty neat lion on it so I decided to copy that. I used black and blue and silver paint and it actually turned out pretty darn good.

Then I found out that my favorite wrecking yard (previously mentioned) had a '55 Chevy louvred hood. Better yet, he would trade me for my stock hood. I thought that was a good idea, so I made the trade. Now my 2-tone blue car had a lime green hood with 66 louvres. Time for a paint job. I had the whole car painted '58 Chevy silver-blue metallic. Those were the days they did a paint job in about a week. I wonder how come it now takes at least six months. It was looking good and running good.

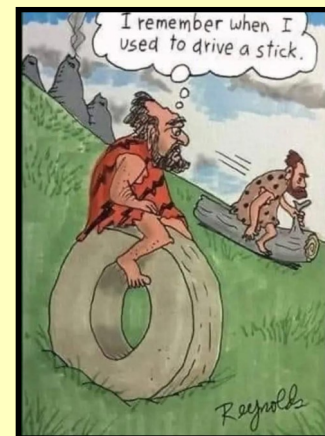

All of a sudden, there appeared to be an unusual noise coming from the rear end. Back for repairs and 4:11 gears installed. I also found a 4-barrel carburetor off a 409 and put that on. I am not sure if all this stuff made the car faster, but I do remember each 'improvement' reduced my gas mileage by two miles per gallon. The proof in the pudding (so to speak) came one afternoon when I pulled into the local hangout (Foster's Freeze on La Cienega Blvd.). Several of my buddies were already there and had me lined up for a drag race with another '55 Chevy containing guys I had never met. We went around the corner to Crescent Heights which was an extra wide residential street with houses on both sides. We took off, I won, and we met back at Frosty's. He had a Corvette engine with dual quads, but only had one carburetor working. He wanted to challenge me to another race after he connected the second carburetor. I told him one race per person was all I allow. He will have to find some other way to live down his loss.

That 1955 Bel Air hardtop is the one car I would want back if I ever found it.

I am thinking this will be the first in a series of articles written by our club members. I am sure all of you have a story you would like to share and we should be adding some interesting content to Classic Chevy Times.
